We were able to figure out the issue with the dynamic linking by just changing the behavior of the build tool in Clang. We have the following example output from one of our Clang applications that is statically linked with a tool, but which does not include the dynamic linking code. There seems to be two problems with this process: The source of our C++ library is now on GitHub.. It is currently not recommended to upgrade to C++11 as this means that the library is no longer maintained. We are now looking into how to enable Clang extensions to our C++ libraries in this version. This blog document describes how we were able to convert the source of our C++ library into an XML/C++ tree so we can easily port the project to other languages on the Clang team.
